On April 19, the School held the P r a t t - P r a d i c k D e c l a r a t i o n C e r e m o n y — the first of its kind in the country — to honor two faculty members. The event featured two faculty members: Dean E. Stan d y Pratt and former History De partment Head H. J. Armand Pratt. The ceremony honored the two faculty members and the program and committed to public speaking and advocacy.

The ceremony is open to all faculty, staff, and students. Each participant is expected to deliver a five-minute speech on a topic of their choosing. Students are not only expected to share their experiences with the Class of 2021 but also to connect with their parents and the program, which fosters communication and understanding.

In his speech, Mr. Pratt highlighted the importance of the event for the Class of 2021. He emphasized that this is an opportunity for students to reflect on their experiences in discovering their voice and to articulate their future goals.

The event concluded with a reception where students and faculty could network and discuss their experiences. The reception was designed to foster a sense of community and to strengthen the bond between the School and the students.

The event was attended by more than 100 students, faculty, and administrators. The atmosphere was filled with enthusiasm and excitement, as everyone looked forward to the next phase of the School experience.

Volunteer Teachers

Volunteer teachers are an integral part of the School's educational program. They bring their unique expertise and passion to the classroom, enriching the learning experience for students.

The volunteer teachers are dedicated to their students and are committed to helping them achieve their full potential. They bring a wide range of skills and experiences to the classroom, providing students with a unique perspective and a broader understanding of the world.

The volunteer teachers are not only educators but also role models, providing students with valuable guidance and support. They are an essential part of the School's community and are highly valued by students, faculty, and administrators.

The School is deeply grateful to all the volunteer teachers for their dedication and commitment to providing a high-quality education for our students. Their contributions are invaluable, and we are proud to have them as a part of our School family.

This year on April 22, to celbrate Earth Day, LAO co-Concernation Proctors (C-Proctors) arranged various activities span-ing four days. From Thursday, April 22, to Sunday, April 25, students participated in Earth Day trivia, stargazing, a screening, and seeing the movie from the Lorax, Traditions Show, Project, and several community service programs.

Ms. Lena Nikolai, one of the academic advisors in C-Proctors, explained the process of coming up with these activities. "We try to come up with an annual programming for Choate's Earth Week over the course of several years," she said. "With a list of options from previous years, we would choose the activities that were most feasible taking into account current guidelines. In addition, they also had to "coordinate with other groups on campus to support the events."

Amanda Benneh '24, an Eco-Rep in Nichols, participated in both the stargazing and The Lorax screening, expressing, "I really enjoyed the experience of being able to view the stars and see the movie. It was a great way to learn about the environment and nature." At stargazing, Benneh and her friends "were able to relax and truly see the beauty in the sky." Another popular event was trivia, in which teams of students raced to answer environmental-themed questions. Sunny '24 said that she learned a lot of "surprising facts and statistics on human consumption and waste, and the movement against climate change and pollution, and nature as a whole." Community service opportunities were advertised to farm and garden on campus, and Ashley Khan '24 said, "I had fun gardening at Paddock Farm and feeling with the chickens.

Chao's Sustainability Committee continued its work, tradition of "Sustainable Swag Give-away" which started with Benneh from Fargo, made from recycled plastic, to new students.

Ms. Nikolai believes that Earth Day is significant in multiple ways, including for its commemoration of a movement and for building awareness for a cause. She points out that Earth Day marks "our outcome of many months of organizing and activism on the part of young people, local universities, organizations, and activists.

Wendy Hsu '24 shared this sentiment. "It's really important for us to appreciate everything that Choate has offered, a part of our being is environmentally conscious. We should rele-se our dependence on non-sustaining the resources provided by Mother Nature.

To embrace the message of Earth Day, Benneh suggested the Choate community should "continue to compost, pay attention to the range of water and electricity, and spread awareness about our own emissions every day." Ms. Nikolai also highlighted the importance of "acknow-ling one's needings against one's wants, actively choosing to be aware of the implications of one's choices, and having conversations with others about our collective choices.

Chao's E-Waste Recycling and awareness Week celebrated April 22-25.

"The job will look a bit different next year in the past, simply because our rising fourth-formers may be attending in-person classes," said Ms. Osterhout. Third-formers still have not had the chance to learn how to code or participate in sports. For the 2021-22 academic school year, the school has spent a lot of time planning for the continued learning process and support for members of their respective departments.

"Mr. Gosztyla was a great educator, a good role model for students, in line with the goals for the curriculum to be anti-racist. The goal is for the curriculum to be anti-racist," said Ms. Devine, as well as to start some of her own.

Both of the new heads are passionate about making their departments more inclusive for students, in line with the goals for the curriculum to be anti-racist. The goal is for the curriculum to be anti-racist.

"We're started working on many things that I believe are so essential to language learning through equitable and inclusive practices that we're always looking forward to the opportunity to incorporate it further in our practice. Hopefully, like the rest of the wonderful things that we're going to do for Choate, for them, for our students, and for each other," he said.

In hopes of preventing future shootings, the Connecticut General Assembly held a hearing on April 15, titled “An Addressing the Cures for Violence in Hartford.” The hearing, held at the State Capitol in Hartford, featured testimony from law enforcement, school officials, and community leaders. Representatives from organizations such as Mothers United Against Violence (MUAV) and Hartford Police Department highlighted the need for stricter gun control measures to prevent future tragedies.

In the same statement, Democratic State Senator Paul Cicarella added, “I think it’s time we take serious action.” Republican State Senator John McKinney reiterated his support for increased enforcement of existing laws, stating, “If we do not take action, then nothing will.”

In conclusion, the hearing serves as a reminder of the ongoing need for action in addressing gun violence. The Connecticut General Assembly must continue to prioritize legislation that prevents future shootings and honors the memory of those whose lives were lost.

S finish the war against the coronavirus, many Syrian children have found hope and safety in the arms of refugee organizations, hospitals, and orphanages. The UNICEF, Save the Children, and the International Rescue Committee have been at the forefront of providing much-needed support to these vulnerable children.

Many children have been forced to leave their homes due to the ongoing conflict. They have been separated from their families and are now living in refugee camps or makeshift shelters. The coronavirus pandemic has added another layer of suffering to their already艰难的生活.

The war has left many children with physical and emotional scars. They have witnessed violence and loss, and many have lost loved ones due to the war. The pandemic has only compounded these traumas.

However, there are signs of hope. Some children have been able to get access to education and healthcare, and this has been crucial for their development.

The Biden administration has taken steps to address the humanitarian crisis in Syria. The administration has pledged $1.9 trillion in relief to help the Syrian people. This includes funding for education, healthcare, and food assistance.

Despite the challenges, there is hope for a better future. We must continue to support these children and work towards a just and peaceful resolution to the conflict in Syria.
The student body interacts with the Choate dress code on a daily basis. A revision of the dress code in 2016 has been highly student-initiated, with goals and the more accessible. This current dress code is much more for students and more formal for classes. Chemistry and biology teacher Mr. John Ford, said, “If you need to take a look at your clothes when you first arrive, that is fine, but if you find it difficult, one thing to notice is that the students want to be more comfortable. Although he felt that there is some value in getting ready in the morning, that excess is attainable at any time, and that students can dress how they want to feel comfortable. The new dress code has been developed to give students more freedom, but also to ensure that the school maintains a certain standard of appearance. The school administration has taken into account the needs and preferences of the students while enforcing the dress code in a way that is fair and equitable. This new dress code has been developed to accommodate the individuality of the students, but also to maintain a sense of unity and identity in the school community. The Choate dress code is not only about appearance but also about the way students express themselves. A Season Without Games: How Teams Are Staying Competitive

On the Water with Andrew Kim '21

Although Co-Captain Andrew Kim '21 might have some regret over this term, he is still finding ways to be a leader for the Boys' Crew Team. Next year, all the crew teams will rotate between each other, so it is likely that Andrew will be able to return to the sport and compete appropriately.

Andrew Kim: I started rowing in the fall of my junior year and decided to come in [my] freshman year. I played hockey in Korea for nine years, so when I arrived here I had never rowed even once. Not knowing that the sport requires a lot of upper body strength, I was looking for a fall sport and spring sport that would prepare me for the hockey season. Luckily, I decided to try rowing and saw that it was a sport that I enjoyed and didn't give up on the sport. The more I practiced, the more I enjoyed it, and I am happy with all the experience I have been given.

NF: What is the hardest part of the sport?
AK: The hardest part of the sport is being successful in this sport, you have to make sacrifices and good habits in your lifestyle. Since rowing is an endurance sport, it is very important to have a good sleep, eat well, and not get sick. Also, it's important to know your limits and know when you need to take a break.

NF: What is the most rewarding part of the sport?
AK: The most rewarding part of the sport is the team spirit and the bond that is formed. The boys and girls crew teams have competed in a lot of competitions. Although teams didn't compete against each other, we still trained and practiced hard for it. Solid pitching, from both offense and defense, can make a big difference in the game. The boys' and girls' teams are very similar in their approach. Both teams have worked hard to develop a strong team spirit and work together to achieve their goals.
